Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a wireless communication device, a wireless communication system, and a memory control method. More particularly, the present invention relates to a wireless communication device, a wireless communication system, and a memory control method, which access a memory in a different manner when there is an error in the received data transmitted from the host device. 2. Description of the Related Art The use of non-volatile memory devices, such as semiconductor storage devices, has increased dramatically in recent years, particularly in devices such as memory cards for use with information handling systems. These devices are typically used for storing data, including software instructions, such as an operating system ("OS") image, and other data, such as user data. The data is preferably stored at a non-volatile memory so that if power to the memory card is lost, the data is not lost. A general non-volatile memory device has a read/write ("R/W") NAND-type flash memory cell array

My goal is to display an app that is like the native android clock app. So, what I have done is to open the default clock app and I have created a new activity and put an action bar. In the action bar I have put a button to show my current app, and I'm able to do that. What I want is to replace the clock in the action bar with the app I opened, in other words, take out the clock, then replace with my app on the action bar. Do you have an idea to achieve that? Thank you very much in advance. A: You need to create a receiver for ACTION_WIDGET_CLICK and only update the widgets you want. That's it. Don't try to replace a native widget with your own, unless it's Android 1.6+. Edit: It's not hard to find examples of the specifics. The pattern is to show a custom widget and add it to the ActionBar, something like: CustomDialog dialog = new CustomDialog(getContext()); dialog.setButton(R.drawable.my_custom_button, "Custom"); onCreate(Bundle) { setContentView(R.layout.my_layout); ActionBar actionBar = getActionBar(); actionBar.setDisplayHomeAsUpEnabled 50b96ab0b6

.Effects of HMG-CoA reductase inhibitors on apolipoprotein E secretion and apolipoprotein E interaction with high-density lipoproteins in cell culture. Previous studies have shown that HMG-CoA reductase inhibitors (statins) increase high-density lipoprotein (HDL) cholesterol through stimulation of apolipoprotein A-I (apoA-I) secretion. In this study, effects of the statins on apoE secretion and its interaction with HDL were investigated. H531, an established rat chondrosarcoma cell line, was used as a model system to investigate effects of the statins on apoE secretion. ApoE production was measured by an enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay method. ApoE secretion was slightly elevated by mevastatin, but not affected by pravastatin, simvastatin, or cerivastatin. Transfected cells produced a wild-type-like apoE protein, and a significant increase of its secretion was observed only by mevastatin treatment. Despite the apoE protein being markedly increased by mevastatin, the amount of apoE in plasma-free HDL was significantly decreased. This result suggests that mevastatin induces apoE lipidation in plasma. In addition, mevastatin was found to bind with rat plasma HDL and to prevent interaction of the HDL with apoE. However, there was no such effect of pravastatin, and no apoE was detected when H531 cells were treated with cerivastatin or simvastatin. The results suggest that mevastatin is a unique statin that stimulates apoE secretion as well as lipidation of apoE in plasma-free HDL. The decrease of apoE and apoA-I on plasma-free HDL induced by mevastatin may be one of the mechanisms by which mevastatin increases HDL cholesterol. Is a pneumococcal vaccine feasible? Current evidence indicates that a 23-valent pneumococcal vaccine is not feasible in developing countries with a high incidence of pneumococcal pneumonia in young children. Current 23-valent vaccine formulations elicit antibody concentrations in only 58% of toddlers with major protective levels considered to be > or = 0.35 microg/ml. Results from a recent trial of high-valency polysaccharide vaccine in a toddler birth cohort showed that failure to elicit high
